Not just parenthood. Jewish parenthood.

A class for beginners

Cedars-Sinai has developed a unique Jewish Expectant Parent Workshop to educate new parents from across the spectrum of Jewish life about the critical questions they will face in bringing a child into the world.

It's not a childbirth preparation class. It's a parenthood preparation class.

Over the course of a three-hour, one-time session led by knowledgeable rabbis and educators (male and female, from Orthodox to Reform denominations), you'll have a unique opportunity to learn and ask questions about naming traditions, baby ceremonies, making one's pregnancy special, creating a safe space to explore the idea of how your family will change and much more.

Participants will discuss:

BABY NAMING TRADITIONS

Naming your newborn presents a number of unique opportunities. Do you name after someone? Or is your child the first in a new set of traditions? Whether you are from an Ashkenazic, Sephardic, Traditional or Liberal background, find out the full scope of traditions and begin to choose the one that's right for your child.

- Honoring relatives
- Meanings and intentions
- Language, cultures and namesakes

WELCOMING CEREMONIES, PRAYERS AND CUSTOMS

While brit milah, or circumcision, is a long-standing Jewish custom, it is not the only traditional or contemporary approach to welcoming a child in the community. Both girls and boys have equal opportunities to be special, and parents can create moments and ceremonies ranging the spectrum from pre- to post-childbirth.

- Simchat bat/baby naming (for girls)
- Brit milah/circumcision (for boys)
- Rituals as your pregnancy progresses
- Special blessing and prayers for parents, grandparents and loved ones

YOUR JEWISH HOME AND COMMUNITY

Becoming a parent for the first time is an incredibly profound experience. It changes a home in both the most obvious and subtle ways, particularly as you make choices about your child and the Jewish tradition. Discover how to establish new rituals for your family — whether it is Orthodox or interfaith — and also learn about connections you may wish to create with the community through local, online and national organizations.

- Daily rituals and routines
- Lifecycle events and holidays
- Shabbat
- You and your partner
